The General Election: Our Catholic faith informs how we look at the world and engage with politics. We seek to put the common good before self-interest and our Christian charity should lead us to seek ways in which we may help the poor, the marginalised, and the vulnerable. We desire a society in which families can flourish, where we care for our common home and where we can offer a welcoming hand to strangers and those in need. Families are the heart of our communities and society. We are not merely the passive recipients of politics but active citizens and an election is the best time for us as Christians to speak out, to get involved, and to lead. As we consider our vote or engage with candidates our bishops ask us to especially consider issues surrounding domestic poverty, family life and taxation, criminal justice, education, Life Issues, the environment, migration, human rights, international relations and peacebuilding.
